A relative newcomer to the whiskey world, Japanese whiskey was born in 1923 when the Suntory company hired Masataka Taketsuru to assist in opening the first commercial whiskey distillery in Japan, the Yamazaki distillery. In 1934, Taketsuru left Suntory and started his own company, the Nikka company. These two companies built their foundations distilling Japanese whiskey for Japanese people, and are the two largest producers of Japanese whiskey today.

Japanese whiskey is primarily produced from malted barley, although a number of other grains are used in their blended whiskeys.

There are currently nine active distilleries in Japan:

- Yamazaki: Suntory
- Hakushu: Suntory
- Chita: Suntory
- Yoichi: Nikka
- Miyagikyo: Nikka
- Fuji Gotemba: Kirin
- Chichibu: Ichiro's
- Shinshu: Mars Iwai
- White Oak: Akashi
